24-25 Freestone County Ag Education

FREESTONE COUNTY
Erin Davis| CEA-Ag/NR

RELEVANCE

Freestone County is home to 19,646 people, with the land area of the county being 877 square miles. Freestone County has an Agriculture/Natural Resources agent who has the primary responsibility of youth development in Freestone County. The agent has met with the Youth Advisory board and Freestone County 4-H Leaders to develop the 4-H Leadership Team program and curriculum enrichment in multiple school districts. Agent and members of the board and coalition work jointly as needed to provide leadership, perform trainings, and assisting volunteers with day-to-day personal development activities. There were over 200 youth who participated in Freestone County Ag Education program.

NUMBERS:

- 29 youth participated in curriculum enrichment, Mindful SELF
- 8 youth participated in the 4-H Leadership Team program
- 5 youth from Leon & Freestone Counties participated in Mindful Retreat
- 91 youth participated in Water Cycle Curriculum Enrichment
- 25 youth participated in Freddy the Fish water quality Curriculum Enrichment
- 91 youth participated in Path to the Plate Ag Education

To develop core competencies, gain understanding of the program development process, increase knowledge on local agricultural issues, and initiate personal relationships with key stakeholders and community leaders. Agent must foster a close working relationship with Extension Specialists and co-workers. Educational programs need to be planned and conducted with input and direction from the program area committees or other stakeholders. Evaluation of programs should provide customer satisfaction feedback from clientele. Agent must also learn to market and interpret Extension programs through newsletters, news articles and formal interpretive events.

RESPONSE

Youth learn and practice appropriate stress management, decision making, personal development, public speaking, community service and leadership.

The Ag Project Coalition & Freestone County 4-H Adult Leaders has identified Ag Education as a educational need for the youth of Freestone County.

TARGET AUDIENCE
This program was targeted towards approximately 100 Freestone County youth

PARTNERSHIPS & COLLABORATORS

- Teague ISD 7th grade classes
- Teague ISD 4th grade classes
- Dew ISD 1st grade classes
- Leon County 4-H joint summer camps

VALUE STATEMENT

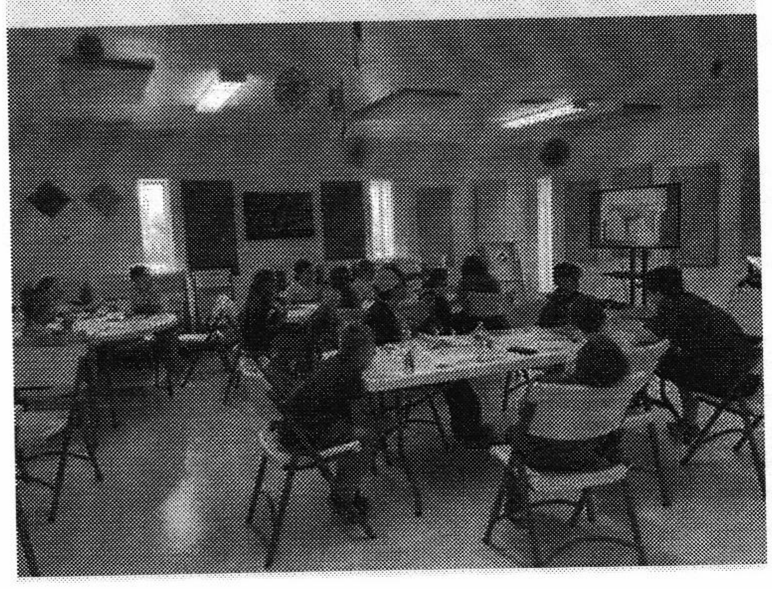

Ag Education

Texas A&M AgriLife Extension Service youth programs provide valuable knowledge and skills within the scope of Personal Development. Through participation in projects or curriculum, youth are exposed to academic disciplines on topics ranging from career exploration, community service, leadership, public speaking and personal development. In addition, participants have potential to gain leadership, citizenship, and career investigation skills.

2024-2025 Freestone County New/Small Acreage Landowner

Freestone County
Erin Davis | CEA-Ag/NR

RELEVANCE

Freestone County is home to 19,646 people, with the land area of the county being 877 square miles. Agent met with the New/Small Acreage & Wildlife Committee to discuss current and emerging issues. The 2025 Freestone County Ag Increment Report estimates income off fruits, vegetables, poultry, goats, hogs, horses, honey, wildlife, fishing and hunting at approximately $57 million out of the $164 million county total. Any factor that affects smaller commodities and producers is considered important to the local economy.

NUMBERS:

- 2, 500 of 19,646 people in Freestone County own less than fifty acres of land for ag purposes.

Small scale producers (under 50 acres) typically have a negative net cash farm income. The goals for small farm operations may or may not be economically driven to the extent that traditional farming and ranching operation as primary sources of income may be. The availability of educational activities in small scale farming and ranching enterprises in Texas with diversified goals incorporating possible labor limitations, quality of life goals, and environmental goals balanced by community development concerns are currently available only as piecemeal segments. The small farmer is a producer group that is continuing to grow based on ag census figures.
